

About the play

When a moon is waxing, says the Farmer's Almanac, is the best time for planting. It is a time of expansion and growth. This play is about a rather conventional minister's wife, who in spite of herself, begins to take on a larger view of spirituality, eventually realizing, as philosophers have known forever, that all religions are one. Along the way, she finds her house infested with a wood sprite, who lives in the Christmas tree, and brings change to the lives of the whole family.
